

After taking the quiz, I have come to find out that I am a tactile learner. This means that I learn by touching and doing. I'm not too sure that I believe this, because I feel like I mostly just learn through repetition, but I guess repetition of touching and doing could be considered tactile learning. I am only 20 percent visual, which I do not really believe as I feel I am fairly visually oriented, and I am only 30 percent auditory, which is about what I thought I would be.

I definitely think learning styles affect how we learn, but I think it is harder to truly realize what learning type we are then by taking a 20 question quiz. I think the only way to truly know is to study different things by using only one of these learning styles at a time, and seeing how well we perform after.